ABOUT JENNIFER

Jen's presentations are known for creating genuine connection while equipping leaders and teams with tools that improve communication, strengthen workplace relationships, and better support neurodivergent individuals across professional and personal environments.

Jennifer Kaufman is a speaker, educational leader, and neurodiversity consultant with more than 20 years of experience as a school principal, educator, and administrator specializing in autism and special education environments.

Holding graduate degrees in Educational Leadership and Educational Technology, along with certifications as both a New Jersey Principal and Superintendent, Jennifer has spent decades helping organizations, educators, and professionals better understand communication, behavior, neurodiversity and relationship dynamics through both practical strategy and human-centered insight.

As the Founder of First Response Autism Solutions, Jennifer also provides autism-informed training for law enforcement agencies, first responders, campus security teams, and public-facing professionals, helping organizations improve communication, de-escalation, and community interaction outcomes. Jennifer's work has been featured across media platforms, podcasts, public speaking engagements, and educational initiatives focused on autism, neurodiversity, communication, and relationship dynamics.

She is also the Author of Grandparenting on the Spectrum: A Journey from Both Sides of the Desk. Known for her warm yet practical presentation style, Jennifer helps organizations move beyond awareness into actionable understanding – creating healthier communication, stronger workplace relationships, and more inclusive environments where people can thrive.
